Coupons. Let not the riquor-dealers allow themselves to be misled by persons who tell them that their taxes will not be increased if they pay their present taxes in coupons. The Constitution of Virginia provides that taxation upon property shall be equal and uniform. Therefore the Legislature cannot tax one property-holder more than another on the same amount of property as assessed by the State officers. But the Constitution empowers the Legislature to tax liceuses in its own discretion. We quote from the Consti-

Art. X., sec. 4: "The General Assembly may levy a tax upon "the following licenses—viz.: The sale of ardent spirits "and all other business which caunot be reached by the ad valorem system." This is a very significant provision. All property must be taxed ad valorem. But, says the Constitution in effect, here is a business that cannot be resched by the ad valorem system, and which, therefore, you may tax as much as you please. There was a proposition either before one house of the Legislature at its last session or before a committee of one house which provided for levying the tax upon licenses for six months at a time, the intention of the originator of that proposition being that at the end of six months the tax should be doubled upon every merchant who had paid his license-taxes in coupons. The French Situation. The gaze of Europe is fixed upon Paris to-day, and the question of the hour is, What to day, and the question of the hour is, What next? Boulangism is on top in the French republic, and it would be prefity safe to predict that it will remain in the ascendancy for some time to come were the French a less mercurial people and did not French history admonish us to be constantly on the lookout for surprises. The defeat of the Government of the Seine, which includes Paris—and Paris is France—was overwhelming. Boulangism is France—was overwhelming. Boulangism and strille short of what his most sanguine admirers had predicted the figures would reach. And what is Boulangism? We know what it claims to be, but what it resilly is, what it will claims to be, but what it really is, what it will lead to, and what it portends for the repullic constitute a serious and interesting problem which time alone can solve. Whatever the solution, however, it will be awaited with the deepest solicitude by the friends of no other aim than the maintenance of an honest republic and the bringing about of certain constitutional reforms. The election cry of his adherents in following that he desires to be dictator was, Long live the Republic! Dissolution, revision, a constitutional convention !" Yet the fact remains that Houlanger was supported by the reactionacies of every kind—incombined regions of Connellaville and Pitts-burg. The vein has been opened on every farm along the whole line of the projected road. It possesses the advantage of being of his platform, if platform it can be called. As will be seen from our Parts dispatches this morning, one of the Parts dispatches the sent through the ball of the captain of the two companies are of course separate. The Mercantile Trust Company, of Baltimore, is the trustee for the boads of the railroad. fact remains that BOULANGER was supported however, President Cannor declined to accept. CARNOT appears to have developed commendable firmness and balance in the erisis, although it is stated that FLOUQUET, who is especially objectionable to the Boulangists, will insist upon retiring, thus depriving the President of one of his main What appears now to be a more distant but none the less logical re- formed auit is a general election that will place BOULANGER at the head of the sffairs of France. Certainly there seems at present no doubt that he is on the crest of a popular wave bearing him towards that goal and will attain it unless some unexpected check—and the unexpected frequently happens in France—shall be encountered. pens in France-shall be encountered. And should be attain it, what then?

friends who are smarting under the mem ries of Sedan, brook that defiance? These and many other questions equally grave crowd upon one in considering the situation in France.

The Richmond Dispatch still persists in its opposition to the settlement of the Virginia debt upon the only terms on which it ever can be settled—terms that will be satisfactory to the creditors—and sayst "The State has not yet tried the pias of making the taxes fall due once a mosth, nor that of apportioning taxes among the several cities and towns of the Commonwealia instead of collecting them herself." The Dispatch seems to be utterly oblivious of the fact that the same objection would apply to the plans it proposes for the repudiation of the State's debt that applies to the present "coupen crusher," and to all other pians for that pernicious object that have been tried and suggested—the effective objection that they would impair the obligation of a contract—and, therefore, be unconstitutional, and necessarily null and void.—Alexandria Gazette.
